Robinson & Cole Named as a Top U.S. Firm for Copyright Law Litigation in 2008

HARTFORD, CT (January 27, 2009) – The law firm of Robinson & Cole was recently recognized as one of the top copyright litigation firms in the nation in the 2009 Law360 Litigation Almanac, based on the number of times that the firm was retained as counsel for copyright litigation matters during 2008.

This recognition was achieved, in part, through Robinson & Cole's work as local counsel for the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) on copyright lawsuits filed in Massachusetts and Connecticut, as well as New York City, Westchester County, and Long Island, New York. In addition to their work with the RIAA, the Firm's group of intellectual property practitioners have also represented authors, publishers, and software companies in both copyright litigation and prosecution matters.

The Law360 Litigation Almanac is a respected source for litigation trends in the U.S. With data culled from over 500,000 federal cases and input from more than 200 participating law firms, the report provides in-depth coverage of the U.S. legal market.

Representing clients around the world in the protection, commercialization, and transfer of intellectual property, technology and technology-enabled products and services, Robinson & Cole's Intellectual Property and Technology Practice Group lawyers assist inventors, authors, licensees, and acquirers in achieving their strategic, financial, and operational goals through practical, efficient, and responsive counsel.
