Robinson & Cole Attorney Appointed as Contributing Editor for American Bar Association's Developing Labor Law Publication

HARTFORD, CT (April 26, 2010) – Robinson & Cole is proud to announce that labor and employment attorney Nicole A. Bernabo has been appointed by the American Bar Association (ABA) as a contributing editor for the publication Developing Labor Law (2010 supplement to the 5th Edition), produced by the association's Labor and Employment Section. With this appointment, Ms. Bernabo joins a national roster of distinguished labor and employment practitioners. She also is editing a chapter of this anticipated ABA publication. Each edition of Developing Labor Law is an essential research tool for labor and employment law practitioners.

Ms. Bernabo focuses her practice on private sector labor relations, labor and employment law, and related litigation. She advises employers on a wide variety of workplace issues, including collective bargaining, defense of unfair labor practice charges, harassment, retaliation, discrimination, hours of work and wages, wrongful discharge, plant closings, employee discipline, discharge and management, disability and reasonable accommodation, family and medical leave, and unemployment.

Ms. Bernabo also counsels companies and human resource professionals on union avoidance, double breasting, concerted job actions, collective bargaining investigations, policies, handbooks, discipline and performance management, employment contracts, severance and separation agreements, individual terminations and reductions-in-force, and mergers and acquisitions.

Ms. Bernabo received her B.A., magna cum laude, from Salve Regina University, where she studied politics, French, and Spanish. She received her J.D. from Suffolk University Law School.
