Robinson & Cole Announces New Partners

Hartford – January 29, 2008 – The law firm of Robinson & Cole is pleased to announce seven new partners.

Edward J. Heath, a member of the firm's Trial & Appellate Advocacy Group, is involved in business and criminal litigation matters. He has experience litigating cases involving trade regulation, unfair and deceptive business practices, antitrust, criminal, and professional liability issues. A significant portion of his work involves defending corporate clients, from local companies to international organizations, against class actions and in multiparty business disputes.

William J. Kelleher, III, a member of the firm's Trial and Appellate Group, is involved in conducting and managing business and commercial litigation, including class action cases, corporate disputes and fraud matters, directors and officers and fiduciary duty litigation, and securities litigation. Mr. Kelleher also represents companies and individuals in a variety of internal investigations; government, grand jury, and regulatory investigations; and white-collar criminal cases, as well as in corporate compliance matters.

David M. Mack, a member of the firm's Health Law Group, represents hospitals, physician groups, community providers, emergency medical providers, and other providers and provider entities, including pharmaceutical and medical device companies and tissue banks. Mr. Mack provides legal counsel on a full range of transactional and regulatory health law issues, including contracting, fraud and abuse, tax exemption, licensure, government investigations, medical staff, joint ventures, affiliations, physician recruitment, reimbursement, and privacy of medical information.

John P. Malloy, a member of the firm's Trial & Appellate Advocacy Group, is involved in counseling and representing insurers in first- and third-party coverage matters nationwide. Mr. Malloy has litigated on behalf of primary and excess carriers in a wide variety of coverage matters, including construction-defect liability, toxic tort liability, environmental liability, employee fidelity, and property coverage cases.

Joey Lee Miranda, a member of the firm's LandLaw Practice Group, is involved in environmental, toxic tort, and utilities matters, including litigation, transactional and regulatory representation, and counseling. She also has experience in commercial and residential real estate matters and zoning appeals. Ms. Miranda regularly appears before the Connecticut Department of Public Utility Control and the Connecticut Siting Council on utility, telecommunications, and energy-related matters. She also handles administrative appeals of agency decisions to Connecticut courts.

Carla M. Moynihan, a member of the firm's LandLaw Practice Group, is involved in the disposition, acquisition, permitting, development, and financing of commercial real estate for over a decade. Ms. Moynihan represents institutions, developers, individual investors, public entities, and lenders in all aspects of commercial real estate transactions, from inception to completion, including the negotiation and drafting of letters of intent, offers, term sheets, purchase and sale agreements, land disposition agreements, development agreements, leases, easements, deeds, conservation restrictions, and loan documents.

Cathryn A. Reynolds, a member of the firm's Business Transactions Group, is involved in sophisticated business and finance transactions. She provides legal counsel to clients on general corporate matters and mergers and acquisitions. She also routinely advises clients in commercial lending transactions, including representation of commercial banks, other lending institutions, and borrower entities in matters ranging from secured and unsecured credit facilities to mezzanine loans and other similar financings.

Founded in 1845, Robinson & Cole has more than 220 attorneys and over 250 professional staff in eight offices, who serve regional, national, and global business clients in traditional practices such as corporate, financial services, intellectual property, utilities, environmental, land use, real estate development, insurance and litigation.
