

Anti-Harassment Training

The Connecticut Sexual Harassment Education and Training in the Workplace Act requires all employers with 50 or more employees to train their supervisors within six months of hire.

Even where training is not explicitly mandated, evidence that an employer trained its supervisors can be of crucial importance during the defense of a harassment lawsuit.

Robinson & Cole announces a new training program designed to assist companies to stay current in their anti-harassment training obligations. Connecticut law requires employers to train supervisors within six months of hire. Although company-wide training is best, newly hired or appointed supervisors, or those supervisors simply unable to attend the company's training, may slip through the cracks, exposing your company to potential liability. Robinson & Cole's Anti-Harassment Training meets Connecticut requirements and is offered on a per head basis for supervisors (defined as anyone who can assign work), human resources professionals, chief executive officers, and in-house counsel.
